– John Latham, Owner

Wiley’s Body Shop in Port Orchard has earned EnviroStars certification at the four-star level. Wiley’s Body Shop received their certification by exceeding hazardous waste and air protection requirements and setting goals for an annual renewal visit by EnviroStars staff. “In today’s world, it’s important that consumers be made aware of how businesses handle or deal with hazardous wastes... Proper and safe disposal is a must,” owner John Latham said.

To ensure that his shop’s pollution prevention commitment remains strong, Latham has posted his EnviroStars goals and expects the support of all employees in achieving them. Latham also designated one of his employees, Chris Sirianni, to coordinate future environmental efforts at the shop. Chris is receiving additional training and performs daily facility inspections as part of his new duties.

The well-organized and clean waste storage area is one example of the attention given to spill prevention. Used thinner from the painting process is also recycled on-site, significantly reducing the amount of hazardous waste generated. The shop also uses a paint booth that employs a series of industrial filters and high-volume, low-pressure (HVLP) spray guns that reduces the amount of wasted paint (called “overspray”).

Any wastes not eliminated, reduced, or recycled on-site are taken to the Kitsap County Moderate Risk Waste Collection Facility near Bremerton National Airport. Latham feels strongly about the role his business can play in protecting Kitsap County’s quality of life and environment. “My family and I love living in Kitsap County and it is essential to me that my business does its part in keeping our neighborhood and our county clean. At Wiley’s Body Shop, we are proud to be a part of the EnviroStars effort to make that possible.”
